October 2010 (Coeur d'Alene, Idaho) - Intermax Networks, the largest independent high-speed internet provider in North Idaho, announces the release of Intermax Voice, a new Digital Phone Service.

With Intermax Voice, anyone with a high speed internet connection can add phone service with a local phone number and free long distance. Local residents interested in cutting costs on home and business phone service will be excited to see the addition of a new competitor in the North Idaho marketplace.

Digital phone service is incredibly easy to set up, as customers simply connect the Intermax-provided phone adapter between their internet connection and their existing phone handset. Customers can be up and running in literally minutes, saving in some cases more than 50% on their phone bills with free long distance and all the services they've come to expect with traditional more expensive copper-line phone service.

"North Idahoans will be excited to have better phone service at a better price," said Mike Kennedy, President of Intermax Networks. "Intermax customers already know the benefits of high-speed internet service delivered by local people, now everyone will be able to benefit from new service in the phone business," Kennedy concluded.

With more than 1600 customers in the Kootenai and Bonner county area, Intermax has been growing at a fast pace and is the largest independent internet and phone provider in the region.
